Plan budget and rules

The National Disability Insurance Scheme is a $20 billion-dollar government initiatives that will shortly be funding up to 500,000 Australian's and have a significant impact on millions of other Australians in terms of employment, services and as stakeholders.

All Participant's get assessed by the NDIS, and get a "Plan", that is essentially a budget. An Participant funded by the NDIA is known as a "Participant". The Participants "goals" are assessed and then strategies are achieving these goals are created across fifteen different categories within three key funding groups: "day to day core living", "capital items", and "building (essentially learning and growth initiatives)". Budgets are created in the categories, in relation to "Items" that are unit priced and coded and added together. As of 2021, the average NDIS plan budget is around $50,000 per year, but this can vary widely depending on the individual circumstances. The range of NDIS plan funding can be from as little as a few thousand dollars per year to several hundred thousand dollars per year from where goods and services can be purchased with regard to the maximum unit prices dictated by the NDIS.
